Home and Community Support Worker

New Beginnings

Learn How to Help Others

Would you like to learn how to help elders and others who may need care at home? Are you looking for a new career within your community? Learn how to work with the Nursing Station and other health workers while providing personal care to people of all ages. The Home and Community Support Worker certificate program is offered in partnership with Confederation College. You'll learn about home care, caregiver relief, community-based services, and other health care skills to give you a new start – and a new beginning. Oshki-Wenjack ensures the program is culturally appropriate and puts special importance on working in remote communities.
